A SNEAKING RATIFICATION.

The renominated Republican legislators and Housemen have succeeded at last in gaining by stealth a ratification. It was a delicate task, and required adroit manœuvring. The meeting was called for Wednesday evening, the public were left in doubt whether the ratification was to be confined exclusively to the gubernatorial nomination or to be extended to the city ticket. The President, George H. Stuart, on taking the chair, said that the object of the meeting was to ratify "the nominations made that day," viz: Geary and Williams, thus totally ignoring the city ticket. All the other speakers followed his example. Governor Pollock said, "We have to-day named our standard-bearers." Wayne McVeigh followed in the same strain, saying, "To-day we have done a noble thing," and Colonel Jordan "congratulate the Republican party and the citizens of Philadelphia upon the nominations made during the day."

The London Spectator, one of the most friendly journals in England, in congratulating itself that the flurry was well over without serious damage to either party, complacently remarked that the United States had backed down before British resolution and pluck. This idea was just as much a mistake as that we were anxious for a war. There has not been the slightest change in public sentiment in this country on the subject of the Alabama claims. All the positions assumed by Mr. Sumner are not sustained in full by the nation at large, but there is a resolute determination to have the controversy settled upon just and equitable terms, and that England shall not be allowed to wriggle out of her responsibilities.

By some strange fatuity that could scarcely possess any other than a British intellect, the holders of Confederate bonds imagined that the United States ought to assume their payment, and there was an effort made to set them off against the Alabama claims. The hopes of the bondholders grew small by degrees and beautifully less until the signing of the Revere Johnson treaty, when the paper of the dead-and-buried confederacy began again to have a market value, and if the treaty had been confirmed by the Senate, there is very little doubt that we would have had these bonds adjudicated against us. The rejection of the treaty, however, drove the British Copperheads again to despair, and the probabilities of their ever recovering the money so freely loaned to Mr. Jeff. Davis and his crew was reduced to a minimum.

The British nation having recovered from their late excitement, will probably be willing to renew negotiations at an early day. In fact, they cannot afford to allow the principle involved in the Alabama controversy to remain undecided; and in the discussion of the subject with Mr. Motley, the British Government will have the advantage of knowing what our real sentiments are. The prospects are certainly not favorable for the Confederate bondholders, and we accordingly hear by the cable, that a meeting of these gentry was held on Wednesday evening, in London, to protest against parts of Mr. Sumner's speech, and to petition the House of Commons against granting any compensation for such claims of the United States, unless they are adjudicated by an impartial tribunal, on principles of equity and international law.

All of which indicates very clearly that there is a very decided disposition among those who did not invest their money for the support of the Rebellion, to come to an understanding with the United States, and the Confederate bondholders see very clearly that, under the next treaty negotiated, their chances will amount to nothing at all. This attempt to set off the Confederate bonds against the Alabama claims is certainly the height of British impudence, and the Government and people of the United States will undoubtedly, under no circumstances, consent to any arrangement by which they will be brought into the controversy. We have not, and never had, any idea of going to war with England on this subject; but there is no evidence of a disposition to abate one iota of our just claims for the damage done by the British-built pirate ships, and we can afford to fold our arms and wait until John Bull finds it convenient for his own interests to make a settlement.

It is a paramount duty of the time to purge the Legislature of men who "sell their votes and our rights to rings of corruptionists." Honest men should shrink from becoming the accomplices of their systematic venality and injustice, as they shrink from the companionship of thieves and burglars of the criminal dock. The work of purification and reform must begin somewhere, if we would not have the Legislature become an unloved mass of iniquity. If re-election follow the scandalous scenes of last winter, no limit can be set to the venality and rascality of the future, and the period is near at hand when the Capitol of Harrisburg will become an auction-room, where all the remaining rights and privileges of the freemen of the State, will, like those already disposed of, be put up for sale to the highest bidder. THE ALABAMA CLAIMS AND THE CONFEDERATE BONDHOLDERS.

The recent ludicrous outburst of fury from Englishmen of all classes that followed Mr. Sumner's speech on the Alabama claims, was a striking proof of the total inability of the English Government and people to comprehend, in the slightest degree, the real attitude of Americans on this subject. Although the Alabama question has been constantly and thoroughly discussed by the newspapers of the United States, every citizen knows that it is seldom referred to in private conversation, and in reality that it occupies but a small share of the public attention; not that the people are indifferent, but that their minds have long been definitely made up, and so far from being in a hurry to press our claims, we are perfectly willing to allow them to remain unsettled as long as the English are satisfied with the situation? Mr. Sumner's speech appeared to give the British nation the first glimmering of an idea as to what American sentiment really was, and having worked themselves into a state of intense excitement and alarm, it was not unnatural that they should imagine that we were on the rampage likewise. For weeks every breath of air from the other side of the Atlantic was heavy with wars and rumors of wars, but finding that there appeared to be no immediate belligerent response from our shores, the British lion curled his tail between his legs, and began to view the situation in a more rational form of mind.

The London Spectator, one of the most friendly journals in England, in congratulating itself that the flurry was well over without serious damage to either party, complacently remarked that the United States had backed down before British resolution and pluck. This idea was just as much a mistake as that we were anxious for a war. There has not been the slightest change in public sentiment in this country on the subject of the Alabama claims. RITUALISM.

Unusual Ceremony in Christ Church, New York.—The Rite of Baptism—Candles, Stolls, and Immersion. Yesterday noon Christ Church (Episcopal) witnessed an unusual, if not a singular, extraordinary scene. For the first time within its walls an infant was baptized according to the most approved forms of the High Church ritual, and what excited no less interest the subject of the ceremonies was the child of the worthy rector himself. No public announcement of the event was made. The service was conducted in the strictest privacy, only a privileged few being present. The ceremony was to commence at noon. At a little past 12 the entire audience had assembled, consisting of ten elegantly dressed ladies and three gentlemen, who had passed into the church through the side entrance. After a brief delay the door of the vestry-room opened, and the baptismal procession moved across the chancel and stood around the font on the opposite side. The procession was headed by the sexton, followed by a handsome boy dressed in a gown and bearing a single tall taper. Immediately after these came the children of the rector, the rector himself, Rev. Dr. F. C. East, his assistant, Rev. T. M. Brown, two ladies of the family, and the nurse with the infant. Rev. Mr. Brown was godfather of the child. At the font the rector put on a purple stole and commenced the reading of the regular baptismal service, the congregation rising. Having read about a third of the service, the rector paused, exchanged the purple stole for a white one, and proceeded with the service. Pausing soon afterwards, he took the taper from the acolyte, placed it in the font, read still further and then took it out again. The service being now half through, the rector took the infant from its nurse, who had divested it of all clothing, and carrying it to the font, immersed it three times, solemnly repeating the words as he did so. "Ferdinand Charles, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." After this ceremony, and when the infant had ceased his cries, the godfather placed the white stole upon him, as representing the purity of Heaven, while the rector held near him the candle, as a sign of the light of the Gospel. The procession next marched to the altar, where the services were concluded, the rector carrying the child in his own arms. The party then retired in the same order to the vestry-room. The ceremony lasted about half an hour, and were unlike any other baptismal service which even the upper stratum of Episcopacy has witnessed in this city. The audience, while quite devotional, seemed to watch the rector's movements with unusual interest. Fringed with this new feature and glory of Ritualism, the ladies and gentlemen closed this remarkable scene with hearty congratulations for the rector, a kiss for the bewildered infant, and a smile for the prospects of High Churchism.—N. Y. Times of this morning.

DARING ATTEMPT TO ROB HERRING'S PATENT FRANKLINITE BANKER'S CHEST.

FERRYVILLE STATION, PENNSYLVANIA RR., June 13, 1869. MESSRS. FAHREY, HERRING & CO., No. 629 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. Gents:—A persistent but unsuccessful effort was made on the night of May 29, 1869, to drill the Banker's chest received from you a few months ago. From facts that have come to our knowledge, it is evident that the attempt to open it was renewed on Sunday evening following. Finding all efforts to drill it useless, the effort was then made to break the lock. The hammering was heard by parties in the neighborhood for several hours, but supposing it to arise from the railroad men replacing a defective rail, excited no alarm. The tools, with the exception of the drills, were left. It is evident that they were not only prepared, but perfectly familiar with the construction of your Chest. That they failed is another evidence that your Banker's Chests are what you claim for them, Burglar-Proof. Respectfully yours, J. BALSBACK, Agent. 6 15 4p
